

Helping Yourself through Grief...

As you work through your grief, it helps to know that:

- you will grieve in your own way
- a supportive, caring environment can help the healing process
- working through grief doesn't mean forgetting or letting go of your memories; nor, does it mean not talking about or sharing stories about the person who has died
- it's okay to feel what you feel and to give yourself as much time as it takes
- sharing your thoughts and feelings can help
- you can ask for more help if you feel you need it

Grief shared is grief diminished.

Grief Support Program – Calgary Zone

Grief Support Services When Someone Has Died

The Grief Support Program offers grief counselling to adults 18 and older who are grieving the death of someone. The program offers individual and group services.

Counselling and Grief Support Group Services

During your first appointment, the counsellor will talk with you about which counselling services would be most helpful.

Individual counselling:

- Up to 8 sessions, based on need.
- There are daytime and limited evening appointments.

Grief Support Groups:

- The groups are held once a week for 6 weeks.
- The groups are led by a member of our clinical team and two volunteers
- In the group, people learn about the grief process. They learn that it can be helpful to share their experience, receive support, and understand they're not alone.

The Counselling Team

All our counsellors have specialized training and skills in grief and bereavement care. The programs are offered in a safe, supportive, and healing environment.

Education Services

The Grief Support Program offers grief and bereavement education to the public, community, and Alberta Health Services (AHS) staff.

Cost

There is no charge for grief services. If you wish, tax deductible donations can be made to the Grief Support Program Fund.

Our Volunteers

Our program is supported by volunteers, many of whom have been through the Grief Support program themselves.

Our volunteer program partners with AHS Volunteer Resources. If you're interested in volunteering, please contact us for more information.

What We Believe about Grief

Grief is a natural response to death.

Healing from a loss doesn't happen overnight – it takes time and patience. Everyone experiences grief differently and at their own pace – there is no set time for healing.

You may be surprised by how your loss affects you. It's common to feel the effects of grief physically, emotionally, socially, and spiritually in different degrees. You might also find that you have trouble concentrating.

Grief often takes much longer, and is sometimes more challenging than what people expect. However, by letting yourself grieve, you will find your way and at the same time be able to remember the person in a meaningful way.

When Grief Becomes too Much...Asking for Help

Although there's nothing abnormal about the pain, loneliness, and disruption often felt when grieving, there are times when you may need to ask for support.

You may want more support if you:

- are having trouble doing everyday tasks (this can include work, social, and relationships)
- find yourself going over and over in your mind how the loss happened (including traumatic or upsetting images or memories)
- find your eating or sleeping patterns change
- have less energy and/or interest in caring for yourself or your family
- feel overwhelmed, helpless, or hopeless (“No matter how hard I try, I'll never get through this,” or “What is there to live for?”)
- find yourself in need of support from others who have gone through a loss like yours
